

FREE DISCUSSION OF COAL STRIKE

LONDON, March 8.—After extended talks with committee representing coal mine owners and their striking employees today Premier Asquith invited representatives of both sides to hold a joint conference "with a view to a free discussion of the whole situation."

What the government's proposals are has not been divulged. The miners reply that they had undertaken to reassemble the national conference of miners but with the reservation that they would not recommend acceptance of the government's invitation except on the understanding that the principle of a minimum wage be excluded from discussion. The national conference of miners cannot be assembled before Monday.

It was announced tonight that the joint conference will take place at the foreign office, but no date has been fixed.

MAGNESITE PRODUCTION INCREASING

California the Sole Producer.—Opening of Panama Canal Will Bring Pacific Coast Product Into Competition with Imported Article for Entire United States.

The value of crude magnesite mined in 1910 ($74,658) is almost twice that of the production in 1909, according to Charles G. Yale in his report on magnesite issued by the United States geological survey as an advance chapter from "Mineral Resources of the United States" for 1910. While the

Present Day Laundry Methods

The modern laundry of the present day turns out work that is a marvel compared with the old-time, crude, hand process. No hand laundry, not even the home woman expert, can put the perfect finish on laundry work like the up-to-date machinery of a modern laundry, such as ours.

nuska Valley, Alaska," by G. C. Martin and F. J. Katz. The accompanying maps show the geology, structure, and position of the coal beds and the report gives detailed measurements of the individual coal seams and analyses of the different grades of coal.

The maps, which are on the scale of a mile to the inch, will also enable the constructing engineer to lay out the most feasible railroad route and will also provide the coal miner and operator with an adequate base for planning the work of prospecting the individual coal beds through drilling, shaft sinking, or tunnel-driving.

The publication of the Matanuska report marks the close of the first epoch in the investigation of the Alaskan coal fields, to which the geologists and topographic engineers of the Survey have devoted so many years. The coals of Bering River field, the report on which was issued in 1908, share prominence with the Matanuska coals among Alaska fields and are in fact comparable with the highest-grade coals of West Virginia or Pennsylvania. Other reports already issued by the Geological Survey cover practically all the additional possible market and railway routes.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF SOUDAN.
Important work has been done during the year toward the solution of the great irrigation problems of Soudan. In his report for 1910 the inspector-general of the Sudan says:

"In the light of the information collected in the six years since the formation of the Soudan irrigation service, fairly definite answers can now be given as to the more important problems for the solution of which this service was created, viz., how to regulate the waters of the upper Nile from the marshes of the southern Soudan, and how and where to introduce artificial irrigation into the fertile tracts of the Soudan."

"The former problem is now in process of solution by the improvement of the Bahar el Jebel by means of dredging operations. The latter problem has been solved for Dongola province, where eventually some 150,000 feddans (feddan—1.02 acres) can be irrigated on the basin system; it has also been solved for Kassala province, where, also, some 150,000 feddans can be provided, over 200,000 feddans can be brought under basin irrigation from the River Gash."

"It is also nearing solution for the Gezira plain, and as soon as it has been ascertained whether crops other than durra can be successfully grown there will be but little doubt as to the question of funds and economic considerations to prevent the construction of the Gezira canal, making possible the eventual irrigation of some 3,000,000 feddans."

"That irrigation of the vast plains lying to the east of the Blue Nile and traversed by the River Atbara is possible, there is little reason to doubt; the artificial irrigation of not less than 12,000,000 feddans in the Central and Eastern Soudan, on practically all of which cotton can almost certainly be grown, is well within the bounds of possibility, assuming that the Blue Nile and Atbara rivers can, without detriment to Egypt, supply the necessary water for such an extensive area."

"This question of water supply dominates the whole of the future development of the Soudan. However, everything goes to show that throughout the major portion of the country water is not required during those months of the year when the river supply is shortest and Egypt's difficulties are greatest, and that, except in the neighborhood of Khartoum and northward, the crops of the Soudan can be grown in the flood and winter months of the year, i. e., between July 15th and March 1st, when the Egyptian government makes no restrictions."

"If this is proved to be the case, the development of the Soudan can proceed without detriment to Egypt, although amply to safeguard Egypt's water supply the construction of an elaborate gauging station at Wadi Halfa and the arrangement of some convention between the two governments is desirable. By such a convention the Soudan government would undertake to pass on to Egypt certain minimum discharges for each period of the year based on Egypt's requirements, and the river's natural minimum, leaving the excess to be utilized as the Soudan might require."
